

MU: UDL & U Teaching and Learning Fellows

Maynooth University colleagues are awarded UDL Teaching and Learning Fellowships.

Congratulations! You are our first ever Faculty Universal Design for Learning (UDL) Teaching and Learning Fellows!

It is a great honour. We are really looking forward to the work.

And to representing our Faculties.

The newly appointed T&L Fellows discuss their work.

I see UDL and inclusive education as intersectional where obstacles are removed and barriers to learning minimised for all students.

Agreed. Universal Design for Learning (UDL) is a practical way to do this by providing multiple means of engagement, representation, action and expression, in teaching, learning and assessment.

Enacting UDL will mean different things in different departments.

We can show people that there can be lots of different approaches some of which are really simple and fast.

How will you work with colleagues to change practice as part of the T&L Fellowship?

We will raise awareness through events and a campaign ...

... developing resources ...

... sharing good practice ...

... and contributing to institutional inclusive education policy discussions.

Thinking about success.

We will work with international experts and share our initiative in national and international conferences.

We are going to consult the research and look at models of good practice

We are ready to make a difference!
